The best remote jobs to work from homeAs work-from-home jobs become more popular, the variety of available remote jobs continues to increase. What was once considered primarily a world for virtual assistants now includes a wide range of professions and industries. If you can reasonably accomplish work tasks and responsibilities from home, there's a good chance you can find a remote job to fit your skill set. Here are some of the possible work-from-home jobs out there: Social media specialistProject managerCustomer support representativeFrontend or backend software developerWeb developerSoftware engineerGraphic designerUX designerUX designerData entry associateAccount managerRecruiterSales representativeProduct managerCopywritingTutorDon't see your preferred position on the list? No worries, the number of remote jobs is too long for us to include a complete list, so expect to find more roles available than what you see here. With modern technology, companies can easily work with talented individuals from all over the world. This makes it simple to use your skills and make money from home. Pros and cons of working from home isn't necessarily the dream life you've imagined. Yes, you get to skip the commute and possibly work in your pajamas, but there are other factors to consider. A FinanceBuzz survey on remote work drawbacks revealed the three most commonly reported downsides of working remotely are: People found it harder to build relationships with co-workers (49%) People felt isolated (46%) People felt isolated (46%) People found it harder to bridge the gap with co-workers and reported feelings of isolation (46%). And yet, the vast majority (81%) said they'd like to stay remote. Why is that? According to a FinanceBuzz survey on remote work lifestyle, the top three perks of working remotely are: Flexibility to work from anywhere (29%) Time saved (no commute, etc.) (23%) The downsides of remote jobs don't seem as big of a deal when you have flexibility. We all like to have freedom, so being able to choose when and where you work is huge. You just have to be more vigilant with distractions. Pet and family member interruptions are a real thing, so it's essential to have a workspace when and where you can focus on your job responsibilities. About 90% of remote workers found a designated workspace to be important, according to a FinanceBuzz survey on the best remote work tools. What you designate as your workspace is up to you, but make sure it promotes productivity and limits distractions. Tools like Slack, Zoom, and Asana can help you manage your tasks and time, and increase your overall efficiency. And of course, a solid internet connection is always a must-have for remote jobs The best remote jobs The best remote jobs The best remote position. As you search for a remote position, it's also important to consider company culture and whether a particular company feels like a cultural fit for you. Your ideal remote role will match up with your skills and interests in addition to being a good cultural fit. Many companies hire for remote roles, including large tech companies like Adobe, Amazon, and Google. If you are interested in learning which companies are hiring for remote positions right now, your best bet is to search for open positions you can browse. It is possible to earn a six-figure salary working from home. Similar to in-house roles, the salary you earn in a remote role will depend upon your unique skillset, professional background, and which positions you choose to apply for. If you have a specific salary in mind, be sure to look through job postings and review salaries being offered. Also, ensure that you discuss your salary requirements with hiring managers as you interview for open roles. Remote roles do not necessarily pay a higher or lower salary than in-office roles. The salary you work for, the role you're in, your skills, your field, and your personal career trajectory. Remote positions are now available across a broad range of industries, which makes it easy to find a job that suits you. You can reference our list of remote work websites to find the best jobs available as you go hunting. Before deciding to work from home, remember to weigh the pros and cons of remote work life. It may take some getting used to, as well as a properly equipped home workspace, but the flexibility it affords is hard to beat. MethodologyTo choose the companies for this list, we looked at job websites that had a simple way to search for remote work or that focused primarily on remote work positions. We looked for sites with an extensive number of positions in a broad range of categories. We did not review all companies in the market.
